Kombucha Taprooms Around the World

While craft beer taprooms are well-established (see 'Beer Taprooms' by Bart Watson, p. 22-23), there are still very few kombucha taprooms in the world. We tracked down some of the most successful in Europe, Mexico, Canada, and the States. What's immediately apparent from these profiles is that no one style or size fits all. Each of them is different. What they've done works in their local markets, connects with customers, and educates people eager to learn more about the drink that's taking the world by storm.

Key to the success of Probio Drinks, located near to the large Plaça d'Espanya square in the heart of Barcelona's barri Sant Antoni, is their Casa de la Kombucha taproom. The charming, plant-filled entrance draws in passers-by. The brewery is in plain sight from the tasting room.

Founder and head brewer Kendra Sepúlveda, who is also a nutritionist and chef, welcomes the opportunity to educate visitors about the background and benefits of kombucha. She'll often host groups of friends where one person has already experienced the drink elsewhere and three others who are 'booch-curious.

Cafe Bärbucha, Berlin, Germany

Ted Zagrabinski serves over 20 different varieties of kombucha at the Cafe Bärbucha in Berlin's central district. In addition to kombucha, they sell a wide range of water and milk kefir, kvass, fermented vegetables, whey, and pickles.

At present, COVID-19 limits service to outside tables. Here customers can enjoy tasting a flight of five varieties at a time, or buy individual bottles or glasses of their Classic, Premium, or Special varieties priced between Euro 4 to 8. Ted's kombucha ferments exclusively in small-batch glass containers with premium quality teas that range from White to Darjeeling to Pu'erh with no additional flavorings.

Cafe Bärbucha is a mecca for visitors to Berlin from across Europe and has attracted a steady stream of other brewers curious to see their humble yet productive fermentary. Passionate lovers of kombucha, Ted exhibits over 80 empty bottles of 'booch from around the world brought in by visitors and boasts a collection of over 60 books on kombucha in many languages. They also carry supplies for home brewing and conduct regular workshops.

Artizen Kombucha, Ontario, Canada

Artizen Kombucha is a labor of love for Dasha Smolentseva, Sebastien Armand, and their three children. Dasha started brewing and drinking kombucha when she was very young with her grandmother back in the Soviet Union.

They've experienced rapid growth since opening their brewery in 2016, which expanded to a simple 'refill' taproom a year later. August 2020 saw them open in larger premises across the street from the brewery. "Even with COVID-19, we see a healthy growth in demand," says Dasha. "Our Bubbles & Bites service pairs our kombucha with a curated local food experience in a box that we deliver to homes and offices, and offer for take-away in the new taproom."

Dasha estimates that 40% of her sales are in kegs, both in the taproom as well as outlets such as health food stores, distilleries, and breweries in Toronto and Ottawa. She still has a stall in the local farmers' market where she first began her business and regularly sells out of their small-batch seasonal offerings.

Diosa Organics, Quintana Roo, Mexico

Victoria and Brett have relocated Diosa Organics from their home in Playa del Carmen, Quintana Roo, Mexico, to a commercial space a block from the beach. The taproom attracts locals who refill their growlers and sample the latest flavors. Currently, open by appointment only, they plan to add fermented tepache, water kefir, and pulque to the line-up of kombucha they sell at the Kombuchería. Since their region of Mexico does not recycle glass containers of any kind, there's a tremendous environmental benefit to selling kombucha on tap.

Kombucha Town, Bellingham, WA, USA

Chris McCoy likes to stay ahead of the curve. Kombucha Town was one of the first brands to sell kombucha in cans. His original taproom 'The Tea Store' opened seven years ago, and in 2016 he expanded into the much larger space known as The Culture Cafe. This is attached to the 6,500 square-foot brewery in the basement of the historic Herald Building in downtown Bellingham, Washington.

The cafe serves a wide selection of fresh Pacific Rim, Hawaiian-inspired food (so is technically more of a brewpub than a taproom). They are open from noon to 10 pm, and host live music and DJs, as well as being the go-to space for community events, private parties, and even a destination on the monthly art walk.

Chris has handed over control and daily operations to a business partner but recognizes the value of a popular venue selling his kombucha on tap in helping build a strong identity for his brand in the region. Indeed, he's asked when he plans to open more taprooms in nearby Seattle and elsewhere on the Olympic Peninsula.
